DETAILED ACTION

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 14, 16-21, 23-26 allowed.

In regard to claim 14, the prior art does not teach or render obvious wherein the high-voltage testing device is configured to simulate the operational state of the generator by outputting a fundamental frequency and a power in single-phase form at an output voltage of at least 400 V, detecting infrared radiation during the simulated operational state of the generator, and energize the field winding causing a thermal response indicative of at least one hot spot in the laminated core during the simulated operational state of the generator and in the combination as claimed.

Claims 16-20 further limit allowable claim 14, and, therefore, are also allowable.

In regard to claim 21, the prior art does not teach or render obvious the high-voltage testing device simulates the operational state of the generator, wherein a field winding is energized at the greater frequency value to cause during the simulated operational state of the generator a thermal response indicative of at least one hot spot in the laminated core, wherein the thermal response is detected by an infrared image detection device configured to detect infrared radiation during the simulated operational state of the generator and in the combination as claimed.

Claims 23-25 further limit allowable claim 21, and, therefore, are also allowable.

In regard to claim 26, the prior art does not teach or render obvious making available power in a single phase form via the high voltage testing device at a fundamental frequency and at an output voltage of at least 400 V that can be regulated, energizing the field winding at the greater frequency value to cause a thermal response indicative of at least one hot spot in the laminated core, inspecting a detected infrared recording for said at least one hot spot obtained during the simulated operational state of the generator, said at least one hot spot pointing towards faults in the laminated core of the generator and in the combination as claimed.
